

As the New Jersey Central is in the hands of a Receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery, the arrested strikers will be punished for contempt of court. They will probably be sentenced before the Vice-Chancellor.

THE ROLL AT HEADQUARTERS.
There was absolutely no excitement at the

	—Present		Absent
	Officers	Enlisted	Officers	Enlisted
This Corps and Staff.....	18	1
Third Brig. Cavalry.....	27	276	1
Separate Troop.....	3	46	374
Washington Artillery.....	4	41
Stations B.....	5	87
Battery A.....	8	63	22
Total.....	579
First Brig. Headquarters.....	12	8
First Regiment.....	25	362	341
Twelfth Regiment.....	21	344	148
Twenty-second Regiment.....	26	470	191
Total.....	1,193
Second Brig. Headquarters.....	11
Eleventh Regiment.....	25	358
Twenty-first Regiment.....	31	269
Total.....	824
Third Brig. Headquarters.....	8
Seventh Regiment.....	25	374

Total.....	1,254
------------	-------

This gives a grand total of 3,841, a slight increase in the numbers reported on Thursday. Gen. Woodward, inspector-General, called at the headquarters yesterday remaining, however, but a moment. He took an afternoon train for Albany.

SPORTS OF THE REGIMENTS.

Strictly confined within their armories the stances have been eminently successful. With the members of the Division Staff at Firemen's Hall in Mercer-st.

the confinement has been no less irksome. Early every day morning—and it was before they wanted to bed—they had an entertainment among themselves. After enjoying a lunch from one of the neighboring latrines, they put the acoustic properties of the building to a thorough test. At the same time, the dress parade in which little dress was worn, the uniform of Col. Jensen, attracting particular remark. Gen. Svalder finally threatened a court-martial if the lights were not put out, and the curtain fell.

The members of the 7th have never been at a loss for diversion. Last Thursday night they threatened Col. Clark with a strike. The Regiment assembled in the large hall, and a committee requested the presence of their commanding officer. As he came into the hall, the men, raised upon the shoulders of two of his comrades, read the following petition, which had received 100 signatures:

In view of the fact that the men of your command, by an imperious order not to be gainsaid, were in a singular manner transferred from their parental homes, virtuous and happy, to this hell, where they are subjected to humiliations and hardships, exposed to awfuling rain,

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

STRIKE AT THE BERGEN COAL DOCKS.
The latest feature of the strike on the New Jersey Central is the foremen among the "wheelers" at the coal docks on Bergen avenue. These men were out on strike on Saturday afternoon, but the company thought that they would all resume work yesterday morning. This, however, they refused to do. Their grievance is not so much the price received as the lack of steady work. Several months ago, when the Company's business declined, the men feared that a large number would be discharged. A consultation was held with the officers and the foremen proposed a strike. The officers and foremen proposed of keeping all the men, and at dividing what work there might be among the command of the regiment, and he expected to receive orders to march before morning.

[illegible]

It certainly looked in the markets yesterday as if the citizens of New-York had struck against a higher price for their provisions and had determined to go unfed until the prices came down once more. This state custom and not at all stiff in clinging to their first-named prices. Both Washington and Fulton markets looked dreary and inactive yesterday. A few stewards for ocean steamers visited the former place and made their regular purchases for to-day's departing steamers, but scarcely a customer cheered the solitude of the caller. The bright-faced German women, with their huge baskets and busy tongues, seemed to have turned a cold shoulder upon the market, which they usually make so animated, and the tradesmen passed the day in bawling the tradeswomen.

Continued on Fifth Page.